ABOUT

During my bachelor in Economics at the University of Padova (TrEC), I was able to assay the broad scope of Economics and I had the opportunity to do a 5-month Erasmus experience at the University of Mannheim. I graduated from TrEC with a thesis in Math, obtaining a final grade of 110/110 cum laude.

In my master in Economics at the University of Bologna (LMEC), I polished my background on quantitative and econometric-related subjects. In the second year, I focused on Macroeconomics and Development Economics. In particular, I followed courses held by prof. Laura Bottazzi (Advanced Macroeconomics, International Monetary Economics) and by prof. Matteo Cervellati (Theory and Empirics of Comparative Development), obtaining great results in the related exams. Moreover, I held a position as Research Assistant of a faculty member of the Economics Department in Bologna (prof. Paolo Masella). This experience and all the projects carried out in these two years have driven my curiosity towards empirical research.

I recently attained the Master's degree in Economics with a final grade of 110/110 with honours: my final dissertation studied the effect of income shocks on MPs' preferences for protectionism in the ideal historical setting of 19th century France. For this work, I constructed the dataset from scratch.

Finally, I am currently working as Teaching Assistant for two Macroeconomics courses (University of Bologna) and as Research Assistant at Bocconi University.
