6. Research in progress:

6.1 Funded projects:

Coordinator of Legal Research of the interdisciplinary project 'The Traditional Justice System of Indigenous Peoples in the state of Pernambuco, Brazil', funded by FACEPE (Fundação de Amparo a Ciência e Tecnologia de PE), and based at the Law School of UFPE (Federal University of Pernambuco), northeast of Brazil. The proposal was awarded with the first place among other 16 approved applications and scored a perfect 10 in the final evaluation. The main objective of this pioneer project is to establish a formal registry of traditional justice systems of indigenous peoples located in the state of Pernambuco. More broadly, it will contribute to the consolidation of democracy under a pluricultural matrix. By mapping justice systems often characterized by informality and oral traditions, it directly supports the preservation of the memory, the history, and the socio-cultural legacy of traditional peoples. More importantly, by clarifying the functioning and rationality of these justice systems, it plays an essential role in the inclusion of indigenous peoples and in reducing ethnic-racial prejudices and inequalities, especially with regard to access to justice and the proper functioning of the judiciary. The project counts with the expertise of socio-legal scholars, anthropologists and historians.

6.2 Ongoing projects:

(with Prof. Chris Thornhill, Prof. Fernando Rister, Prof. Orlando Villas-Boas, Prof. Marco Loschiavo, and Prof. Maurício Palma) the interdisciplinary project 'Constitutional Law and Legacies of Imperialism in UK and Brazil' is being developed by researchers of the University of Manchester and University Mackenzie to be submitted to a special call of FAPESP and UKRI.

(with Prof. Atina Krajewska) the interdisciplinary project 'Reproductive justice and indigenous women from the Northeast of Brazil' is being developed by researchers of the University of Birmingham and the Federal University of Pernambuco to be submitted to a special call of AHRC focused on establishing research partnerships with indigenous researchers.
