- Lead CI, DP200100902 'The effects of Female Genital Mutilation Laws in Australia.'
With Australian Research Council funded Discovery Project, Maree Parry, Nan Seuffert. Awarded 2019 for commencement May 2020. (AUD$475,000)
Abstract: This project aims to produce new knowledge about laws that have criminalised female genital mutilation (FGM) in Australia since 1994. FGM laws are now subject to robust international criticism, as well as increased concerns among the affected communities. Through the use of innovative primary data collection strategies with law and policy makers, justice system officials and with affected communities in Australia and the UK, the project seeks to produce robust evidence and original insights into the effects of these laws and the potential impacts of proposed legal initiatives. Expected benefits include enhanced legal and policy approaches to FGM that will assist with safeguarding the wellbeing of women and children.
- CI, 'Resistance, Recognition and Reconciliation in South Africa and Northern Ireland – Lessons for Australia'
Australian Research Council funded Discovery Project, with Adrian Little, Mark McMillan, Paul Muldoon and International Participants Erik Doxtader and Andrew Schaap. Awarded 2012 for commencement 1 April 2013. (AUD$165,000)
Abstract: This project examines resistances to reconciliation in Australia, South Africa and Northern Ireland. It compares efforts toward reconciliation in these conflictual societies to contribute to knowledge on how to live with conflictual political, psychological and jurisdictional claims in light of efforts toward Australia's Constitutional Amendment. The research will compare the experiences in Northern Ireland and South Africa with Australia, by examining key events toward and against reconciliation in each context, it will discuss these events at three symposia attended by key figures in these processes in each context, and it will use this knowledge to contribute to an understanding of how Australia can live with a past that cannot be forgotten.

- Awarded Fellow 'The Quality of Remorse in South Africa and Northern Ireland – Implications for Australia'

Australian Research Council, Discovery Early Career Researcher Award (DECRA), awarded 2011 for commencement 1 May 2012. (AUD$375,000)

Abstract: This project is an examination of the quality of remorse that is required by survivors, and expected from institutions and individuals, in the context of Northern Ireland after The Troubles and in South Africa post Apartheid, with a background examination of archives and literature on the experience of trauma of Holocaust survivors. In each context oral and written archives are examined to consider calls for remorse, and key informants in each contexts are interviewed to discuss the findings. The understanding from these contexts will then be discussed with key indigenous activists and academics in Australia to formulate new insights into the role of remorse in dealing with the 'unfinished business' of reconciliation in Australia, particularly in regard to the Stolen Generations.
