Part VII – Research Activities

All the research activities are focused in the field of Natural Language Processing, with a focus on lexical and sentence-level semantics and, more recently, summarization, coreference resolution and Large Language Models. In particular, the following areas have been or are currently under investigation:

Keywords	Brief Description
Word Sense Disambiguation (WSD) & Induction	We have been working on the automatic resolution of lexical ambiguity, a key problem that underlies text comprehension. We have addressed this problem by proposing innovative knowledge-based, neural and neuro-symbolic approaches aimed at overcoming the various limitations of previous supervised systems, including the need to manually annotate large amounts of sentences in each language and the granularity of the reference sense inventories. We have also worked on the problem from different angles, such as inducing the meanings a word can express with graph-based algorithms and proposing new disambiguation paradigms based on lexical substitution, definition generation, and word sense comprehension.
Semantic Role Labeling (SRL)	We have been working on addressing the various long-standing issues in labeling semantic roles, namely: the ability to abstract away from the English language, thanks to the introduction of a novel language-independent frameset resource, VerbAtlas (http://verbatlas.org), and cross-lingual cross-inventory neural architecture for the SRL task. Moreover, given the focus on verbal SRL, we have successfully investigated how to scale the task to nominal role labeling given the lack of training data (and even the lack of wide-coverage nominal framesets).
Semantic Parsing	We work on the creation of language-independent representations of meaning for entire sentences, a task referred to as Semantic Parsing. Here we have worked on several improvements in cross-lingual Abstract Meaning Representation (AMR) and on the development of a brand-new language-independent representation, BabelNet Meaning Representation (BMR) – bound to our BabelNet knowledge graph – and its use for multilingual semantic parsing.
Taxonomy and Ontology Learning	Another key goal in my past research was to enable automatic reasoning by creating and utilizing structured knowledge navigation: this was achieved by putting forward novel methods to create taxonomic and ontological structures, including specialized ones, proposing new graph-based algorithmic techniques, such as OntoLearn and OntoLearn Reloaded, as well as an algorithm for the creation of a comprehensive taxonomy of an encyclopedic resource such as Wikipedia (the Wikipedia Bitaxonomy).
Knowledge Acquisition	We have addressed the topic of large-scale knowledge acquisition through innovative approaches that have enabled the creation of the largest multilingual knowledge graph, BabelNet (https://babelnet.org), from the automatic integration of more than 50 different knowledge resources (WordNet, Wikipedia, Wiktionary, Wikidata, and many others). BabelNet is now a very popular resource not only in NLP but also in many other areas of AI, used by more than 1000 research bodies and institutions. To complement these approaches, we have proposed several original Open Information Extraction algorithms that, by bringing together syntactic and semantic analysis, can extract millions of semantic relationships between concepts and entities.

Multilinguality	In recent years, also thanks to the creation of BabelNet, a whole new research direction has opened up that aims to develop algorithms for multilingual NLP and that I am exploring with my research group. Such algorithms have the peculiarity of cross-referencing the information available in different languages, automatically learning patterns that, on the one hand, take into account the complexities of each language and, on the other hand, leverage their interactions to improve performance in language comprehension. This dimension affects all research areas pursued in my group, including Word Sense Disambiguation (from Babelfy to more recent models like AMuSE-WSD), Semantic Role Labeling (InVeRo SRL), Semantic Parsing (e.g. BabelNet Meaning Representation).
Large Language Models	Starting from 2023, we have been working on creating pre-trained Large Language Models (LLMs) in Italy, in the context of the Future AI Research (FAIR) project, which brings together the AI community, with the goal of, first, creating the missing know-how for large-scale endeavours in this direction and, second, innovating LLMs with the introduction of novel factuality and trustworthiness concepts.
