PROFILE

Born in the North of Italy, I've been raised and educated in Sicily, at the sunny seaside of its myths, stories and tragedies, whose deepest meaning I'm still trying to grasp.

I hold a PhD in Modern Philology from the University of Catania and a MA in Advanced Planning of the Teaching of Italian Language and Culture to Foreign Students from the University of Venezia «Ca' Foscari».

For some 10 years I've been teaching Humanities in academic courses (Italian Language and Culture; Italian Literature and comparative Literatures; Contemporary History and History of the Organized Crime; History of Publishing), both for Italian and foreign students. I've published extensively on the same subjects, with particular focus on Sicilian writers and their relationships with the publishing system.

I'm currently engaged in education, with a Full Tenure contract in the Italian secondary school and a part-time collaboration with several educational publishers.
