Statements:

Digicult is an impressive example of collective labor, run by Marco Mancuso. For those not in the area, you can connect yourself to networks of media art internationally via this very thriving hub - Lauren Cornell (Curator at the New Museum, former Executive Director at Rhizome.org)

Marco and his crew are indestructible. I shouldn't jinx them by saying that, but really, my hat is off - Bruce Sterling (Writer and Futurologist)

Marco Mancuso and the Digicult team are both in this time, and ahead of it. Not because they predict the future, but because their strong insight into contemporary culture, informed opinion about past cultures, and ability to link the two - Alfredo Cramerotti (Director at Moystin)

I don't know how the hell he does it, but Marco Mancuso maintains on Digicult an incredibly intense flow of news and documentary about the new networked media arts, with a very strong p2p flavor - Michel Bauwens (Theorist, Founder Foundation for Peer-to-Peer Alternatives)

In the field of media arts there are a select few outstanding institutions that render context, critique and history. Digicult is one of those essential nodes and that it comes out of Italy that doesn't provide public funding is testament to what Marco Mancuso is capable of! - Kurt Hentschläger (Media Artist)

Marco Mancuso is a tour de force in creative agitation and Digicult sets the benchmark for style and substance in contemporary criticism - Prof Andy Miah (Researcher and journalist)
